Defence against predators

Animals are equipped with a variety of protective adaptations designed to prevent them from being eaten by other animals. Camouflage, disguise, noxiousness, and mimicry are primary defence mechanisms that operate regardless of whether a predator is present. Bluffs, threats, and group cooperation are secondary defence mechanisms, being brought into effect when a predator is encountered. However, the most common secondary defence mechanism is flight; most animals will choose to flee rather than stand and fight.

flounder

Camouflage

The most elaborate camouflage is disruptive coloration: the stripes running across the zebra's body break up its outline, thus enabling it to merge into its surroundings. Many species change their coloration to conform to the character of their environment. Moulting enables the rock ptarmigan to change its white winter plumage for patchy brown plumage that blends with the partially exposed ground when the snow melts in the spring. The flounder has sensitive colour vision with which it registers the subtlest colour gradations, and is thus able to reproduce the colour and texture of the sea bottom.

stick insect

Disguise

Lying disguised as an inanimate, inedible object is an effective means of escaping capture by a predator. The stick insect can resemble a twig growing from a branch, by lying head downwards and extending its body outwards, at an angle, from the branch.

sea anemone

hermit crab

Commensalism

Some relatively defenceless species protect themselves by forming associations with other animals. The hermit crab lives in a commensal association with the sea anemone, and is protected from its enemies by the anemone's stinging tentacles.

Noxiousness

Many animals are vividly coloured with red, yellow, orange, black, or white to warn predators that they are poisonous or have a disagreeable means of retaliation. The European salamander's black and yellow coloration advertises the poisons secreted from skin glands on the surface of its body. The orange and black Monarch butterfly contains poisons from milkweed plants on which the caterpillar feeds. The skunk's black and white stripes warn attackers of the putrid-smelling spray that it ejects from its anal glands when threatened.

Bluffs and threats

Animals under attack often try to frighten the predator away by bluffs or threats. Birds ruffle their feathers in order to appear larger and more formidable. The eyed hawkmoth reveals huge false eyes on its underwings to scare attackers. Many predators will not eat carrion, so the grass snake, when threatened, feigns death by rolling on its back with mouth open and tongue lolling

Group cooperation

Some herds of animals, instead of scattering when danger threatens, work together to fend off attackers. Musk-oxen bulls form a defensive ring, with their horns pointing outwards, round the cows and calves of the herd, presenting a united front against preying wolf packs.

The urinary tract

Teeth

The diagram on the left shows a cross section through a molar. That on the right shows a full set of adult teeth (upper jaw).

The Respiratory system

The exchange of gases in the lungs takes place in the terminal bronchioles, where blood in the capillaries passes close to the lining membrane allowing oxygen to be absorbed and carbon dioxide to be given up.

The Endocrine system

The endocrine glands produce hormones which are the chemical messengers that keep the body healthy, controlling such functions as growth and sexual development. The pituitary gland, in conjunction with the hypothalamus, controls the activity and secretions of the other endocrine glands.

- electr- /ɪˈlektɪr-/, electro- comb form 1a (caused by) electricity (<electromagnetism>) (<electrochemistry>) b electric (<electrode>), electric and (<electrochemical>) (<electromechanical>), electrically (<electropositive>) 2 electrolytic (<electroanalysis>) (<electrodeposition>) 3 electron (<electrophile>) [NL electricus]
- Electra, complex /ɪˈlektə/ n the Oedipus complex when it occurs in a female [Electra, character in Gk mythology who incites her brother to avenge their father's death by killing their mother]
- electret /ɪˈlektɪrət, -ɪrət/ n a dielectric body in which a permanent state of electric polarization has been set up [electricity + magnet]
- 'electric /ɪˈlektɪk/ adj 1a of, being, supplying, producing, or produced by electricity (< ~ current>) (<an ~ plug>) b operated by or using electricity (<an ~ motor>) 2 producing an intensely stimulating effect, thrilling (<an ~ performance>) 3 of a musical instrument electronically producing or amplifying sound (<an ~ organ>) [NL electricus produced from amber by friction, electric, fr ML, of amber, fr L electrum amber, alloy of gold and silver, fr Gk elektron; akin to Gk elektrō beaming sun, Skt ulka meteor]
- 'electric n 1 pl electrical parts, electric circuitry 2 electricity – sometimes pl with sing meaning, informal
- electrical /ɪˈlektɪkəl/ adj 1 of or connected with electricity (< ~ output>) (< ~ engineering>) 2 ELECTRIC 1 (< ~ appliances>) – electrically adv
- electric 'blanket n a blanket containing an electric heating element that is used to warm a bed
- electric 'blue adj or n harshly bright slightly greenish blue
- electric 'chair n 1 a chair used in legal electrocution 2 the penalty of death by electrocution
- electric 'eel n a large eel-shaped fish of the Orinoco and Amazon rivers that is capable of giving a severe electric shock
- electric 'eye n PHOTOELECTRIC CELL
- electrician /ɪˈlektɪʃ(ə)n/, ɪˈlek-/ n one who installs, maintains, operates, or repairs electrical equipment
- electricity /ɪˈlektɪˈtrɪsəti, -ee-/ n 1 (the study of) the phenomena due to (the flow or accumulation of) positively and negatively charged particles (e.g. protons and electrons) 2 electric current, also electric charge USE ENERGY, PHYSICS
- electric 'organ n a specialized tract of tissue (e.g. in the electric eel) in which electricity is generated
- electric 'ray n any of various rays found in warm seas that can give electric shocks
- electric 'shock n SHOCK 4
- electric 'storm n a violent atmospheric disturbance usu accompanied by thunder and lightning
- electrify /ɪˈlektɪfaɪ/ vt 1a to charge (a body) with electricity b to equip for use of or supply with electric power 2 to excite, thrill – electrification /-fɪˈkeɪʃ(ə)n/ n
- electro- /ɪˈlektro-/ – see ELECTRIC-
- electrocardiogram /ɪˈlektroʊˈkɑːdi ɑːɡrɑːm/ n the tracing made by an electrocardiograph
- electro'cardio'graph /-ˈɡrɑːfɪ, -ˈɡrɑːf/ n an instrument for recording the changes of electrical potential difference occurring during the heartbeat – electrocardiographic /-ˈɡrɑːfɪk/ adj, electrocardiographically adv, electrocardiography /-ˈɡrɑːfɪ/ n
- electroconvulsive therapy /ɪˌlektroʊkənˈvʊlsɪv/ n a treatment for serious mental disorder, esp severe depression, in which a fit is induced by passing an electric current through the brain
- electrocute /ɪˈlektroʊkyoʊt/ vt to execute or kill by electricity [electr- + -cute (as in execute)] – electrocution /-ˈkyoʊʃ(ə)n/ n
- electrode /ɪˈlektroʊd/ n a conductor used to establish electrical contact with a nonmetallic part of a circuit (e.g. the acid in a car battery)
- electrodynamics /ɪˌlektroʊdɪˈnæmɪks/, -dɪ-/ n pl but sing in constr physics dealing with the effects arising from the interaction of electric currents with magnets, with other electric currents, or with themselves – electrodynamic adj
- electroen'cephalo'gram /-ɪnˈsef(ə)ləˈɡrɑːm/ n the tracing made by an electroencephalograph [ISV]
- electroen'cephalo'graph /-ɪnˈsef(ə)ləˈɡrɑːfɪ, -ˈɡrɑːf/ n an instrument for detecting and recording brain waves [ISV] – electroencephalographic /-ˈɡrɑːfɪk/ adj, electroencephalography /-ˈɡrɑːfɪ/ n
- electroform /ɪˈlektroˌfɑːm/ vt to form (shaped articles) by depositing material, esp a metal, on a mould by electrolysis
- electrokinetics /ɪˌlektroʊkɪˈnetɪks/ n pl but sing in constr physics dealing with the movement of particles or liquids resulting from or producing a difference of electrical potential – electrokinetic adj
- electrolysis /ˌelektroˈlaɪsɪs, ɪˈlek-/ n 1 the passage of an electric current through an electrolyte to generate a gas, deposit a metal on (an object serving as) an electrode, etc 2 the destruction of hair roots, warts, moles, etc by means of an electric current [NL] – electrolyse /ɪˈlektroˌleɪz/ vt
- electrolyte /ɪˈlektroˌliet/ n 1 a nonmetallic electric conductor (e.g. a salt solution) in which current is carried by the movement of ions 2 a substance that becomes an ionic conductor when dissolved in a suitable solvent or melted
- electrolytic /ɪˌlektroˌlɪtɪk/ adj of or being electrolysis or an electrolyte – electrolytically adv
- electromagnet /ɪˌlektroʊˈmæɡnɪt/ n a core of magnetizable material surrounded by a coil of wire through which an electric current is passed to make the core into a magnet
- electromagnetic interaction /ɪˌlektroʊˈmæɡˌnetɪk/ n a fundamental interaction experienced by most elementary particles that is responsible for the emission and absorption of photons and for electric and magnetic forces

- electromagnetic radiation n radiation consisting of a series of electromagnetic waves ➔ PHYSICS
- electromagnetic spectrum n the entire range of wavelengths or frequencies of electromagnetic radiation extending from gamma rays to the longest radio waves and including visible light
- electromagnetic unit n any of a series of electrical units in the cgs system based primarily on the magnetic properties of electrical currents
- electromagnetic wave n any of the waves that travel by inducing simultaneous periodic variations in the intensities of electric and magnetic fields and that include radio waves, infrared, visible light, ultraviolet, X rays, and gamma rays
- electromagnetism /i,lektro'hmagnetiz(ə)m/ n 1 magnetism developed (e.g. in an electromagnet) by a current of electricity 2 physics dealing with the physical relations between electricity and magnetism – electromagnetic /-mag'netik/ adj, electromagnetically adv
- electrometer /,elekt'rɒmɪtə, i,lek-/ n any of various instruments for detecting or measuring electrical potential differences or ionizing radiations (e.g. alpha rays) using the forces of attraction and repulsion existing between charged bodies
- electromotive force /i,lekt'rə'moʊtɪv/ n the amount of energy derived from an electrical source per unit current of electricity passing through the source (e.g. a cell or generator)
- electron /'lekt'rɒn/ n a negatively charged elementary particle that occurs in atoms outside the nucleus and the mass movement of which constitutes an electric current in a metal ➔ PHYSICS [electr- + -on]
- electronegative /i,lekt'rɒnə'gətɪv/ adj 1 charged with negative electric traits 2 having a tendency to attract electrons – electronegativity /-negə'tɪvəti/ n
- electron gun n the cathode and its surrounding assembly that emits a stream of electrons (e.g. in a cathode-ray tube) ➔ TELEVISION
- electronic /i,lek'trɒnik, /eek-/ adj 1 of electrons 2 of, being, or using devices constructed or working by the methods or principles of electronics – electronically adv
- electronics n pl but sing in constr physics or technology dealing with the emission, behaviour, and effects of electrons in thermionic valves, transistors, or other electronic devices
- electron lens n a device (e.g. in an electron microscope) for focussing a beam of electrons by means of an electric or magnetic field
- electron microscope n an instrument in which a beam of electrons is used to produce an enormously enlarged image of a minute object – electron microscopist n, electron microscopy n
- electron optics n pl but sing in constr electronics dealing with those properties of beams of electrons that are analogous to the properties of rays of light
- electron tube n an electronic device (e.g. a thermionic valve) consisting of a sealed container containing a vacuum or gas through which the flow of electrons is controlled
- electron volt n a unit of energy equal to the energy gained by an electron in being accelerated through a potential difference of 1 V ➔ PHYSICS, UNIT
- electrophile /i'lekt'rɒfɪl/ n a substance (e.g. a chlorine molecule) with an affinity for electrons – electrophilic /-fɪlɪk/ adj
- electrophoresis /i,lekt'rɒfəs'reesɪs/ n the movement of particles through a gel or other medium in which particles are suspended under the action of an applied electric field [NL] – electrophoretic /-fə'retɪk/ adj, electrophoretically adv
- electroplate /i'lekt'rɒfɪl/ vt to plate with a continuous metallic coating by electrolysis

1 The blue whale is found throughout the world's oceans and has declined in numbers due to uncontrolled hunting for its meat and blubber. Whale hunting is now regulated by an International Convention. However, the blue whale is further threatened by commercial fishing for krill on which it feeds.

7 The aye-aye inhabits the coastal rainforests of northern Madagascar and is one of the world's rarest mammals. It was feared by Malagasy villagers and was killed on sight. Gradual destruction of the rainforests for agriculture has further reduced stocks.

2 The sea otter lives along the sheltered coasts of Alaska and California. It suffered near-extinction in the early 1920s as a result of extensive hunting for its highly valued fur.

6 The green turtle is widespread in warm Atlantic, Pacific, and Indian seas but is seriously threatened by over-exploitation for its meat, eggs, and hide.

3 The giant anteater lives in the tropical grasslands of Central and South America and, with other creatures, is threatened by the development of large areas of grassland for farming and the building of roads, railways, and towns.

4 The chinchilla inhabits arid regions of the Andes in South America and was hunted almost to extinction for its fur. It is now protected in Chile and widely bred in captivity.

5 The gorilla lives in the lowland and mountainous regions of western Africa. Its survival in the wild is threatened by agricultural development and by the demand for apes by zoos and research scientists.

8 The Pyrenean desman lives by watercourses in the Pyrenees and mountains of northern Spain and Portugal. It is threatened with extinction as a result of pollution of the rivers and marshes, which poisons its food supply and prevents adequate oxygenation of the water.

Endangered species

Extinction is a natural process but it has been accelerated in recent centuries by human intervention. The greatest threat to wildlife is from the destruction of their natural habitats for urban, industrial, and agricultural development. However, excessive exploitation by hunting for skins and meat, pollution of water, and upsetting the natural equilibrium by introducing species to new regions, are factors that have endangered countless species of plant and animal life.

9 The heath fritillary is found in woodland and on heaths in southern England. Its numbers were reduced when specimens of butterflies and caterpillars were too freely taken by collectors and it is now disappearing rapidly as more areas of its habitat are taken for land development.

10 The Calabrian primrose is found only in southern Italy and has been reduced in numbers to near-extinction by the grazing of farm animals and by picking.

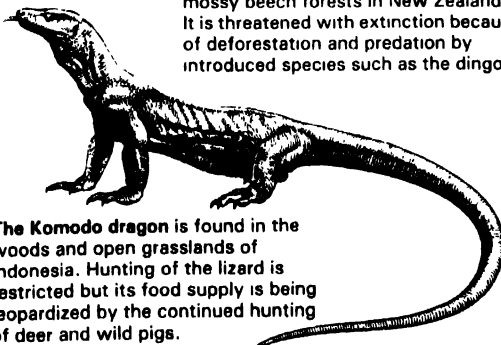

11 The leopard is found in the forest and savannas of Africa and southern Asia. Because of its valuable skin, the leopard's future is seriously threatened.

12 The Japanese crane inhabits the wide marshlands of Japan and Manchuria. Its numbers have been diminished by hunting and by the loss of its habitat to land development.

14 The kakapo lives mainly on the floor of mossy beech forests in New Zealand. It is threatened with extinction because of deforestation and predation by introduced species such as the dingo.

15 The Komodo dragon is found in the woods and open grasslands of Indonesia. Hunting of the lizard is restricted but its food supply is being jeopardized by the continued hunting of deer and wild pigs.

13 The giant panda lives in the bamboo forests of mountainous regions in western China. It is at risk because it has a restricted habitat and its food supply is declining.

16 The Cooktown orchid is an epiphytic plant living on humus in the northern Australian rainforests. It has been endangered by the over-picking of plants for sale and cultivation.

Our limited energy resources

By the middle of the next century it is expected that the world's reserves of oil, gas, and uranium* will be almost or completely exhausted, although coal is likely to be available for at least another 200 years

* The isotope of uranium (U235) used by conventional nuclear power stations constitutes only a small proportion of naturally occurring uranium, most of which is unfissionable U238. If breeder reactors are developed, U238 which is currently unused could provide power and more fuel in the form of plutonium. The world's supply of uranium would then last another 1,000 years platform at sea level

sea bed 300 metres

oil bearing rock 400 metres

Oil production platform

Oil (petroleum) and natural gas are the result of the decomposition of lifeforms from the Carboniferous age. Gas often forms pockets over layers of oil-bearing rock, and its pressure forces oil up the borehole to the wellhead. Only about 25% of the oil can be recovered in this way — another 10% or less may be recovered by pumping gas or water into the deposit, but the rest is not economically obtainable by current methods.

Nuclear power

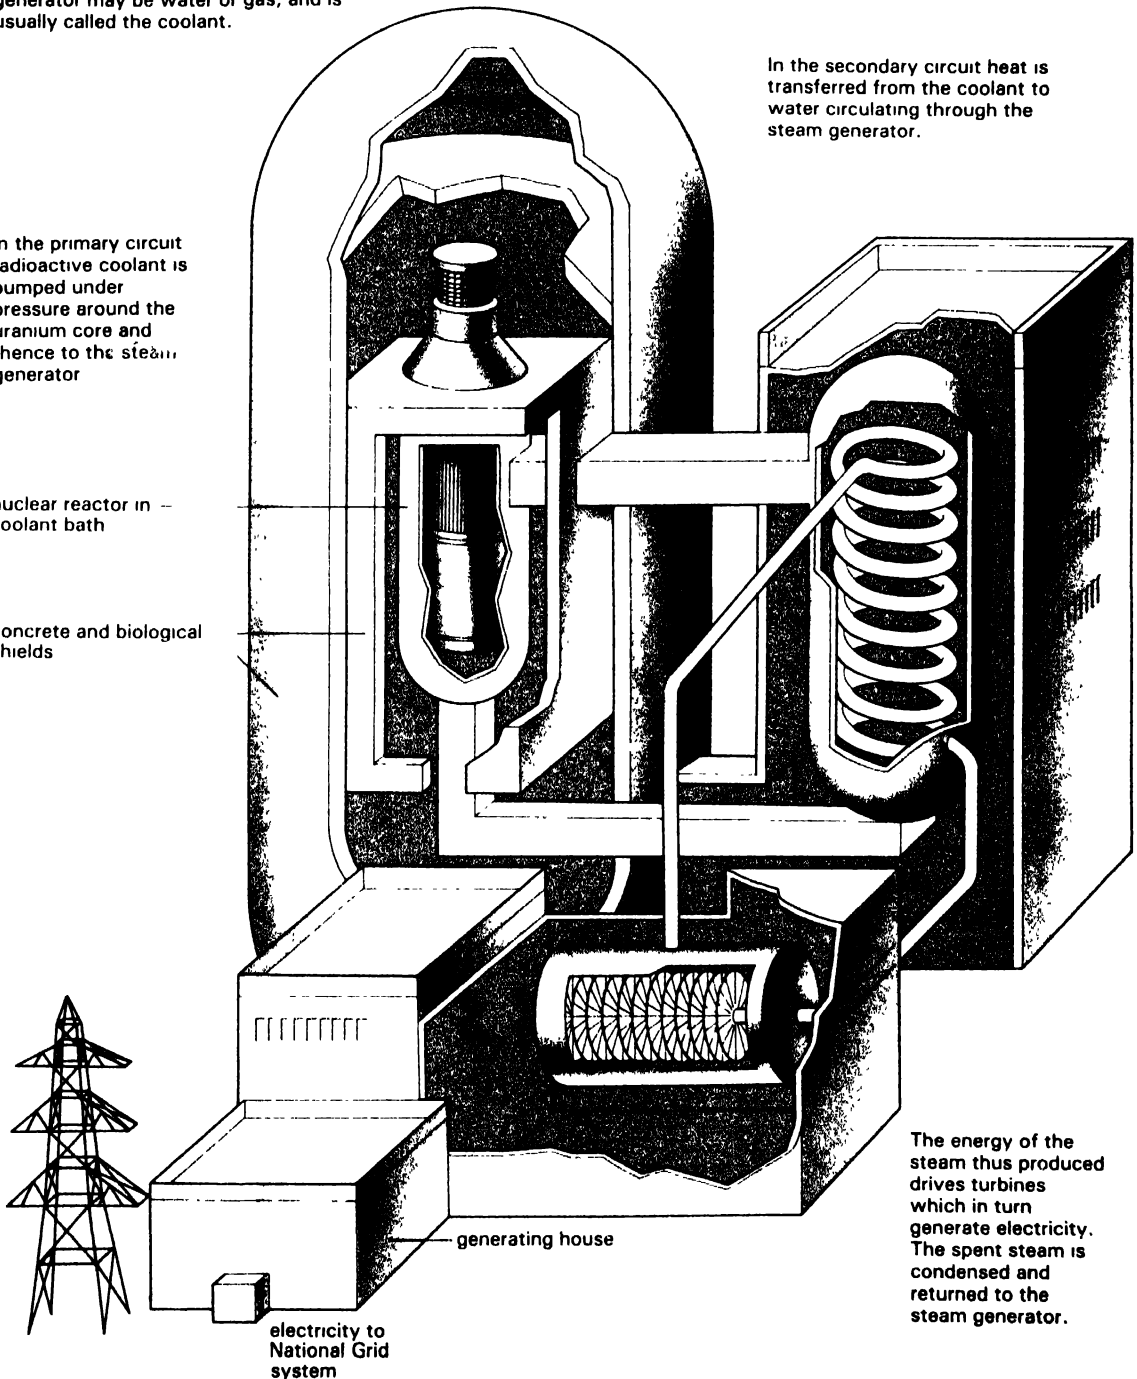

Nuclear power stations are similar in principle to conventional stations in that water is heated to steam to drive turbines which, in turn, produce electricity. However, the heating process, instead of burning oil or gas, is the fission of uranium 235 nuclei in a central core (the reactor). The substance surrounding the core and transferring heat to the steam generator may be water or gas, and is usually called the coolant.

In the primary circuit radioactive coolant is pumped under pressure around the uranium core and thence to the steam generator

In the secondary circuit heat is transferred from the coolant to water circulating through the steam generator.

The energy of the steam thus produced drives turbines which in turn generate electricity. The spent steam is condensed and returned to the steam generator.

Energy-saving house

There are many measures that can be taken on a domestic scale to conserve and even create energy, some of which are shown on this page. The design and siting of a house also have a part to play in that small windows facing north and large windows facing south cut heat loss and make maximum use of available sunlight as a heating agent (passive solar heating).

Solar panel – a solar panel of photovoltaic solar cells converts sunlight into electricity

Greenhouse heating

Vents in the walls and windows encourage convection airflows to heat in winter and cool in summer

air is heated up in greenhouse

vents in greenhouse roof

hot air from house passes into greenhouse

double-glazed windows

heavy masonry wall

thick stone foundation

Rocks and masonry absorb heat during the day and radiate it at night. The greenhouse glass admits short wave solar radiation but traps the heat of infra red radiation.

Solar heat collectors consist of single or double glass panes backed by a dark, heat-absorbing material. When the sun shines on the panels, water circulating in fine copper pipes behind the heat absorber is warmed and transfers the heat to a heat store (an insulated water tank or in more sophisticated systems a chemical tank). Solar heat collectors are usually connected to the hot water taps via the heat store but may sometimes be linked to central heating radiators.

Our alternative energy resources

sun's energy

solar collectors and solar panels convert the sun's power into usable heat or electricity photosynthesis — plants convert the sun's energy into organic matter which can be fermented into alcohol, decomposed for gas, or simply burnt ocean thermal energy conversion — the temperature difference between surface water warmed by the sun and cold deeper water may in future be used to generate electricity hydroelectricity — the sun's energy constantly raises water by the process of evaporation, providing the head of water necessary for hydroelectric schemes wave power — the bobbing motion of waves can be used to produce electricity tidal power — where the tidal range is sufficiently great, power can be generated by harnessing the flow wind power — efficient wind turbines are now being developed and offshore 'wind farms' have been proposed water turbine/mill — rivers provide energy on a relatively domestic scale

heat pump — extracts available heat from air, water, or earth

Fossils

Only a few of the millions of animals that must have lived on earth are preserved as fossils. Some of the best examples of these are of marine animals with shells or exoskeletons like those shown.

The age of fish

Fossils of many different kinds of fish have been found in rocks of the Devonian period. The fish, shown above, are pictured in a lake setting, but many fish of this era lived in both lakes and the sea. Dipterus probably had functional lungs and was therefore amphibious. Ichthyostega represents a form that is close in evolutionary development to the more advanced amphibians.

The age of mammals

The Cainozoic era began 65 million years ago and continues today. Hyracotherium – the earliest horse discovered – was probably hunted by Oxyaena. Coryphodon was a large plant-eater. Fossils of our own species and our closest relatives have been found only in rocks formed during the last 3.6 million years.

Pterodactylus*RhamphorynchusPteranodonBrontosaurusThe age of reptiles

During the Mesozoic era reptiles were not only dominant on land and important in the sea but were also highly successful in the air – Pteranodon is the largest flying creature known. The dinosaurs became extinct about 65 million years ago and the mammals then became dominant on land

Main principles

First Aid consists of simple measures to prevent injury or illness from becoming worse until medical aid can be obtained. It aims to keep the patient in the best possible condition until responsibility is taken over by a doctor or nurse.

Treat the casualty where he/she is and move only if in dangerous surroundings, such as fumes, fire or flood.

Always handle the patient gently and reassure by talking.

Assess the general situation and establish your priorities of action.

- 1 Be calm, take charge, clear away a crowd, but give specific jobs to those who remain to help.
- 2 Diagnose what is the matter by obtaining a history of the accident, listening to the casualty's symptoms, and examining him/her for signs.
- 3 Render the correct first aid treatment.
- 4 Send the casualty to a doctor, hospital or his home.
- 5 Report clearly the place, type of accident, and what you have done

Priorities

● BREATHING If breathing has stopped, make sure the mouth is clear of debris, tilt back the head to open and straighten the air passage to the lungs. Pinch the nostrils closed and blow your own breath gently through the casualty's mouth into the lungs at your own breathing rate.

● BLEEDING Blood loss must be stopped promptly, but strategy depends on the site of bleeding. Rapid blood loss is more severe in its effect than a gradual loss. Loss of large amounts deprives vital organs and produces a state of shock.

Asthma attacks

These occur when the bronchial tubes are constricted, and breathing out becomes very difficult, producing wheezing. Sit the patient up with support for the back. Loosen tight clothes which might restrict movement of the chest. Allow fresh air and ventilation. Reduce anxiety and give any medicines that have been prescribed for the emergency.

Bites and stings

If you can see it remove a bee sting gently with tweezers. Apply the tweezers as near the skin as possible, in order not to squeeze venom in. Apply an alkali or antihistamine cream to bee or wasp stings. Stings in the mouth or throat can be dangerous, and multiple stings, or a sting into a vein, should be seen by a doctor.

Snake bites

The only poisonous snake in the UK is the adder (viper).

Lay the patient down and tell him/her not to move about. Reassure him/her, and wash the wound if possible with soap and water.

Apply a dry dressing, and immobilize limb. Get the patient to hospital as quickly as possible.

Bleeding

Lay the casualty down if possible

Elevate the injured part unless a fracture is suspected.

Loosen tight clothing, and expose the wound

Control haemorrhage by pressure on the sides of the wound, or by direct pressure over a clean dressing

Apply sufficient sterile dressing into the depth of the wound until it projects above it, and cover with adequate padding, and bandage firmly.

If bleeding continues, add more pads, but do not disturb the original dressing, or any clots.

If a foreign body like glass is embedded in the wound, apply pads round the wound until high enough for a bandage to be applied across them so as to avoid pressing on the projecting foreign body or bone.

Apply bandages firmly enough to stop bleeding, but not so as to stop the circulation along a limb.

Immobilize the injured part, keep the casualty warm and comfortable and get him/her to hospital as quickly as possible.

Pressure points

Pressure points are places where firm pressure upon an artery against the underlying bone will stop blood passing to a wound. This method is used when direct pressure on the wound cannot be applied

The brachial point lies in the upper arm below the belly of the biceps muscle, or where the seam of a man's jacket runs. Pressure on the underlying humerus reduces flow, if the elbow or lower arm are injured.

The femoral pressure point is found in the middle of the upper thigh and needs the pressure of both thumbs to stop haemorrhage in the lower limb

Treatment of wounds

Wash your hands if possible. Elevate the limb and protect the wound with a sterile swab. Gently clean surrounding skin and dry it with swabs of cotton wool used once only and wipe away from the wound. Then apply a sterile dressing and keep it in place with bandages or adhesive strapping.

Stop bleeding

Slight bleeding comes from injured capillary vessels and wells up as red blood. It is easily controlled by gentle pressure. Venous blood is darker, and pours from a wound, but stops immediately on elevation. Arterial bleeding is bright red and issues from a wound in jets in time with the heart beat. Elevation and firm pressure are usually effective.

Rest and keep wound elevated

This position ensures the maximal supply of blood to the brain and other vital organs while the patient is at rest.

Bandage the wound

Bandages are wound with even firm pressure, and serve the purpose of keeping dressings in place and maintaining sufficient pressure to prevent further bleeding.

Nose bleeds

Sit the patient up with the head tilted slightly forward so that blood is not swallowed. Get him to press firmly the side that is bleeding for 10 minutes, or pinch both nostrils while the patient breathes through the mouth for the same time. Let him/her rest near an open window afterwards, with instructions not to blow the nose, or sniff.

Burns and scalds

These are wounds caused by dry or moist heat, and dangerous in proportion to their area. Danger to life arises from the greater chance of infection compared to most other wounds, and from shock through loss of plasma.

TREATMENT

- 1 Extinguish flames by quickest method: douse with water or smother with a blanket, coat, rug, etc.

- 2 Place the affected part under cold running water, or immerse in cold water.

- 3 Do not remove burnt clothing since it is rendered sterile by heat. Do not burst blisters.
- 4 Remove at once rings, belts, or bangles, or anything that may cause constriction as the part begins to swell.
- 5 Lay the patient down, and cover the burnt area with sterile dressing, keeping the part elevated. Particular care is required not to contaminate a deep burn.
- 6 Guard against shock.

Chemical burns

Remove contaminated clothing, avoiding burning yourself. Place the burned area under running water to dilute and wash off a strong acid or alkali. Then treat according to the general treatment for burns. Where the eye is affected. Lead the patient to a tap or sink. Place the head under running water pulling the eyelids apart.

Alternatively, lay the patient down, and freely irrigate the open eye with water. Apply a pad and bandage, and seek medical aid.

Car and road accidents

Be clear about your priorities.

- 1 Warn other traffic by placing red warning triangles or similar items at a distance of 200 metres from accident in both directions. Switch on your hazard flashers.
- 2 Switch off engine and lights. Disconnect battery if possible. Give a NO SMOKING order. Try to ascertain extent of injured and injuries, including any thrown clear. Only move occupants if car is on fire or if they are not breathing.
- 3 Send for ambulance service and police. State: Where to come, How many patients, The nature of the injuries, Whether specialist equipment is required, eg cutting gear.

ACCIDENT PROCEDURE● Breathing

A crash victim is often unconscious and cannot breathe because of a bend or constriction in the airway. Open airway by extending the head backwards. Check for obstruction of airway and relieve it, eg remove false teeth. If still not breathing after clearing airway, pinch nose, hold head back, and inflate lungs by blowing.

● Bleeding

Press sides of wound together. Elevate if possible. Continue pressure over wound with pad and firm bandage. Pressure point control of haemorrhage if pressure over wound impractical.

● Unconsciousness

Try to keep the unconscious patient breathing until ambulance arrives. Keep the airway open and clear. Loosen tight clothing and turn into the recovery position.

● Shock

Shock can result from loss of blood to the brain. In severe cases the patient will die unless he/she receives a blood transfusion. Mention a state of shock when calling for an ambulance.

● Fractures

Use commonsense methods of immobilization eg Upper limb: use arm sling or pin sleeve to lapel.

Lower limb: tie to sound leg, and pad between knees and ankles.

● Wounds

Stop bleeding and cover wound with sterile or clean dressing. Immobilize.

● Chest Injury

Fractured rib: if on one side only, incline patient to injured side.

Both sides: sit up with support to back.

Explosion: internal injury to chest causes difficulty in breathing. Sit patient up with support. Give oxygen if available.

Victim may be blue and cough up blood.

Sucking wound: caused by penetrating injury into pleural space
Danger is collapse of lungs by air entering through wound.

Place hand over wound to close it, and seal with dressing.

Choking

Act immediately. Instruct patient to take a deep breath through the nose and give his strongest cough to move obstruction like a piston. Be ready to remove any obstruction (a crust, false teeth) with your finger.

Baby: hold upside down and smack on the back to loosen a swallowed object

Child: place across the lap inclined down at 45 degrees, and strike smartly between the shoulder blades.

Adult: If he collapses, keep him on his side, and strike between the shoulder blades.

If obstruction remains, begin resuscitation. Remember that the tongue can obstruct the airway in unconscious patients. If able to stand get behind him with your arms around his waist, hands gripped just below his ribs and make a firm hug inwards and upwards.

Cramp

Cramp is a painful often violent muscular contraction. It may appear during exercise especially after sweating heavily, or after loss of body fluid through diarrhoea and vomiting. It is not dangerous except in circumstances such as swimming in cold water.

First aid is to stretch the muscle—for instance, in the back of the thigh, straighten the knee and swing the leg forward. Replacement of fluid and salt will prevent further attacks

Diabetes

A diabetic treated with insulin may suffer from sugar deficiency:

- 1 if he/she does not eat within a short time after the injection
- 2 if he/she exercises heavily and the sugar reserves become depleted. As the brain is deprived of sugar, behaviour may become erratic, as if drunk. The colour is pale, the patient sweats and the hands shake.

While he/she is conscious the treatment is to give the patient sugar, jam, chocolate, or honey with a little water. Repeat this after 10 minutes

If unconscious, put the patient in the recovery position, give nothing by mouth, and send for medical help.

Ear – object in

Usually the victim is a child. Do not try to remove object, for it usually gets pushed further in

When a small fly or insect has entered the ear, it can be floated out by olive oil or water, with the patient lying down. Children require firm handling or they may panic.

Electric shock

Never touch the patient until the current has been switched off.

If the switch-off point is not obvious remove the patient from contact with the electric current by means of a dry non-conducting object, eg walking stick, roll of newspaper, chair, or folded garment. The patient may require resuscitation. Deep burns may require dressing. Keep under observation and send to hospital.

High voltage currents may spark across a gap up to 6 metres.

If the casualty is on or near a pylon, phone the electricity authority, and do not approach until the current has been cut off.

A patient struck by lightning may be unconscious and require resuscitation. Burns may need to be dressed.

Epileptic attack

The patient suddenly falls to the ground unconscious, sometimes emitting a high pitched cry. On the ground he/she goes rigid and holds his/her breath and may go blue. Later he/she makes regular convulsive movements, which may injure hands, feet or the tongue.

- 1 Remove from danger of fire, glass, bookcase, etc.
- 2 Protect the feet and arms with cushioning.
- 3 Place between the back teeth a soft gag, eg handkerchief, coat lapel, to prevent biting the tongue.
- 4 Control the arm and leg movements, kneeling astride the casualty, to prevent injury. Do not try and prevent these movements entirely, only reduce their force.
- 5 If attacks are repeated fetch medical aid.
- 6 After the convulsions have stopped, place in recovery position.

Eye injury

Minor Cover eye with a loose pad, and retain with sellotape. Do not insert drops or ointment. These may introduce infection.

Major Lay patient down on his back. Cover both eyes with clean material to prevent eye movements. Remove to hospital in this position, and continue to reassure the patient.

Foreign body in eye

Enquire how and what entered the eye. Low velocity particles like dust can be removed. Sit the patient in a good light. Pull down the lower lid and use the moistened corner of a handkerchief to remove the particle. If the object is under the upper lid, pull the upper lid over the lower lid twice. If this fails to remove it, stand behind the head, instruct the patient to look down and hinge the eyelid over a matchstick, and wipe away. Particles lodged in the clear window of the eye (cornea) should be left, the eye covered with a pad until seen by a doctor.

Fractures

A fracture must be suspected when a forceful injury has been applied to a bone or joint. Pain is usually, but not always, present. Look for swelling, deformity, loss of power or movement.

A closed fracture does not break the skin. An open fracture involves a wound so that bacteria can enter through the skin.

A complicated fracture is one where the sharp broken bone end damages other structures.

The aim of first aid is to prevent the condition becoming worse by immobilizing the fractured area.

- 1 Treat the patient where he is.
- 2 Deal first with the haemorrhage, and dress any wound temporarily.
- 3 Tell the patient not to move.
- 4 Immobilize the fracture with splints and bandages
- 5 Pad between bony points, to prevent friction, and fill out hollows to prevent movement.
- 6 Splints should be long enough to pass beyond the joint above and below a fracture. In certain fractures of the lower limb, the uninjured limb can be used as a splint, or the trunk and leg for an arm.
- 7 Bandages should maintain the splint in position, and should therefore be firmly tied, but not so tight as to restrict the blood circulation.

This aspect of first aid requires special training.

Note Patients with injuries to back and neck should not be moved. Inexpert bending or twisting can complicate a spinal fracture by damaging the spinal cord. Ask the patient if he can move his fingers and toes, and feel his extremities. Note this. Maintain warmth by covering with a rug, coat, or blanket until experienced first aiders take over.

Bandages and splints

Splints may be improvised from any rigid material but they should always be padded. Neckties and belts may be used as bandages but they must not be tied so tightly as to interfere with the circulation. Never tie a bandage over the site of a fracture.

Strain

A strain is a muscle injury arising from fibres being over-stretched, so that some have torn. Treatment is by firm supporting bandaging, followed by rhythmic movement.

Sprain

This occurs near a joint. A severe sprain may be difficult to distinguish from a fracture and indeed a flake of bone may be lifted. If in doubt, treat as for a fracture. The commonest sprain is at the ankle. Swelling and pain can be reduced by applying a cold compress with the leg elevated above the horizontal. Later, apply a firm elastic bandage over a compressible pad.

Gases and fire hazards

Smoke

Smoke rapidly suffocates. Take precautions before entering smoke-filled room. If no respirator is available, take a deep breath and enter area keeping as low as possible to remove casualties who are easily accessible. Cover nose and mouth with wetted handkerchief.

Poisonous gases

Take a deep breath and hold it. Pass quickly into room and remove casualty to safety. If possible open doors and windows. The use of a lifeline is vital before entering a gas-filled chamber, and the help of others is usually required.

Head injuries

Blows to the head can cause fractures of the skull and/or brain damage.

Skull fracture

A fracture may not be serious unless a portion has been depressed so that it lies on or penetrates the brain underneath. A fracture of the side of the skull may cause bleeding from blood vessels which run in grooves on the inside of the skull. Fracture of the base of the skull (the part on which the brain rests) may be suspected if there is bleeding around an eye, through an ear, or down the nose, especially if mixed with watery fluid.

Brain damage

Concussion occurs when the brain, which is soft, is shaken violently inside the rigid bones of the skull. It may last for a few seconds, or for several hours, for which time there is a subsequent loss of memory. Various degrees of disturbed consciousness may be shown.

Compression

Consciousness is gradually lost over a period of time, due to brain swelling, bleeding within the skull, or from a depressed skull fracture. This is a very serious condition which as it advances alters the size of the pupils, their reaction to light, and eventually affects the breathing which becomes thick and noisy. Such patients must not be left. Their condition should be constantly monitored, and they must be removed to special units in hospital. During transport provide and maintain a clear airway, remove dentures, clear saliva or mucus from the mouth and throat. If breathing stops, commence respiratory resuscitation at once. There are often other injuries, and these should be searched for and treated. Never attempt to give an unconscious patient any food or fluids by mouth.

Heart attack

This occurs most commonly in middle aged men, and women over the age of 50. Severe gripping pain, often described as crushing, is felt in the centre of the chest. It may spread into the left arm, or up into the neck. The patient may be pale, with blueness of the lips, and sweating. The pulse beats quickly and rapidly, and may become irregular and faint. Breathing may be difficult, or even very wet and bubbling, with coughing and froth in the mouth. Sometimes breathlessness and collapse may be the only effects. Keep the patient at rest. Provide a chair, loosen tight clothing, and send for medical aid. Keep crowds away, and ensure a supply of fresh air. Cover with a blanket for comfort and protection against cold.

Heat (and cold)

Heat exhaustion

Where copious sweating occurs in a hot atmosphere, the loss of fluid and minerals from the body may produce a state of weakness and collapse. The face is pale and ashen, the skin is moist, and the pulse is fast and weak. Muscles may go into cramp. Put the patient at rest in a cool place, in light clothes, and give him/her fruit juice, to which a pinch of salt has been added, to drink slowly.

Heatstroke

Where the ambient temperature is very hot, and the usual means of regulating body temperature by sweating and breathing off water vapour are insufficient, a heatstroke may occur. This is a dangerous condition. The face is red, the skin hot and dry, the pulse is rapid and bounding, and the temperature may reach abnormal heights. Urgent measures are required to bring down the temperature – strip off the clothes, place patient in a cool room, pack round wet towels, ice, fans, to reduce the temperature to around 38–39°C, and then allow the temperature to fall more slowly to normal by keeping the patient in light cotton clothes, at rest, in cool surroundings.

Cold (hypothermia)

Old people and babies are less able to maintain normal temperature.

Illness, certain drugs, and unheated rooms often work in combination to produce hypothermia.

Normally warm areas of skin, eg armpits and groin, are cold to the touch. Other symptoms are pale skin (may be deceptively pink in babies), slowness of thought and speech, which is gruff, proceeding to coma, and death. Prevent heat loss by covering from head to foot in blanket. Do not use hot water bottles, or give alcohol. Give warm (not hot) drinks. Obtain medical aid.

Nose

Do not attempt to remove object placed in nose if it cannot be removed by gentle blowing. Consult a doctor.

Poisoning

Corrosive substances

All that can be done is to dilute the stomach contents by providing drinks of milk or water. Place in the recovery position while awaiting the ambulance. Never attempt to produce vomiting.

General management

Non-corrosive substances recently swallowed may be recovered by making the patient vomit. If he is conscious place the fingers or the back of a spoon down the throat, and repeat after giving half a tumbler of water.

Send urgently for medical aid. Keep for identification any empty container, or sample of vomit. Keep patient at rest, in the recovery position. Be prepared to resuscitate if he becomes unconscious. Remain with him until medical aid arrives.

Household poisons to be kept out of reach of children

All prescribed medicines, aspirin, alcohol, sleeping tablets, and iron tablets. Cleaning substances, bleach, lavatory, window and general purpose cleaners. Detergents, carpet cleaner, ammonia, perfumes and cosmetics. Fabric cleaners, sterilizing fluids, and conditioners. Soaps, scouring powders, liquids and creams. Polishes, lavatory blocks, dishwashing powder. Oven cleaning pads. All aerosols, glues, batteries. Cigarettes.

Garden poisons

Garden sprays, weedkillers, liquid fertilizers. Seeds. Flowers and berries, eg yew, laburnum, deadly nightshade.

Recovery position

The recovery position ensures that blood reaches the brain, that the patient does not swallow his/her tongue if unconscious, and that saliva, blood or vomit do not produce choking.

To place a casualty in the recovery position:

- 1 Loosen tight clothing, and remove hard or crushable objects from pockets.
- 2 Kneel beside patient and straighten the arms alongside the body, palms upwards.

- 3 Grasp the farther hip, and pull towards you with one hand, while protecting the face with the other.

4. Adjust limbs in flexed position, and cover with blanket.

Mouth to mouth ventilation

Pinch the casualty's nostrils as you take a deep breath

Seal your lips around the mouth and blow into it, observing from the corner of your eye that the chest rises. If the chest fails to rise, the airway is blocked and must be cleared

Remove your mouth to allow the chest to deflate. The escape of air is clearly audible. Inflate the lungs four times in succession rapidly, and then settle to a regular rate of one inflation every six seconds. Continue until breathing becomes spontaneous, and do not leave the casualty until the ambulance arrives

In a child Remember the greater capacity of an adult's lungs, and be guided by the rise in the child's chest which must not be filled beyond its smaller limit. In a child breathe into the nose and mouth with your mouth. In a baby blow gently.

Resuscitation

Where breathing has stopped the first priority is artificial respiration. When the face can be reached, and no facial injuries prevent it, the recommended method is mouth to mouth ventilation. This is an urgent procedure and seconds count. Lay the casualty on his/her back on a firm surface.

Clearing the airway

Unless the airway is completely clear, any attempt at resuscitation will fail. Open the casualty's mouth and remove any obstructions, such as false teeth. If the tongue has fallen back, press the chin forward.

Tilt the head back fully

Shock and fainting

Shock results from injury, blood loss, burns, fractures, and nervous causes. It is a dangerous condition of reduced vitality.

The casualty is pale, sweating, cold, with faint rapid pulse and shallow breathing. Comfort, confidence and reassurance with gentle handling must be supplied by the first aider to prevent the situation from worsening.

- 1 Stop severe bleeding.
- 2 Do not move casualty.
- 3 Lay him/her down keeping the head low and the feet raised.
- 4 Loosen tight clothing.
- 5 Ensure fresh air.
- 6 Move crowd away.
- 7 Keep covered with blanket, but do not supply external heat.
- 8 Moisten the mouth and lips, but do not give anything to drink.

Fainting

This occurs as a result of nervous shock, or when standing in hot oppressive circumstances.

The pulse is slow, and the patient may become fully unconscious. Do not try to lift him/her up, but raise the legs. Loosen tight clothing, ensure a supply of cool air.

Reassure patient as he/she recovers. In certain circumstances, if patient is sitting, put the head down between the knees.

Unconsciousness

Causes of unconsciousness may not be clear – the casualty is helpless. Priority is to protect the airway, especially when the patient is on his/her back – fish out obstructions.

Then arrest any bleeding and dress any wounds.

Consider the possibility of other injuries, eg fractures.

If he/she can be moved, turn into the recovery position, but not if back injury might be present.

Never try to pour anything into the mouth. Be careful what you say for the patient may still be able to hear.

Treat the cause of unconsciousness if you know it.

Never leave the casualty unattended.

Remove to hospital, or ensure a medical check even if unconscious for a moment.

Safety in the home

Every year a great number of serious accidents, and millions of minor ones, take place in the home. Children are particularly vulnerable to cuts, burns, and falls – care should be taken to protect them from likely hazards.

Danger areas

Garden – always put garden tools away after use, and be especially careful when using electrical tools, eg hedge trimmers. Ponds, however shallow, constitute a danger to children.

Kitchen – electrical appliances should be wired correctly and checked often. Do not leave trailing leads, and turn saucepan handles inwards on the cooker. Knives and cleaning materials should be kept well out of reach of children.

Living room – never overload sockets with too many appliances or run cables under the carpet. Do not hang a mirror over the fireplace, and fit a fireguard when children are about.

Stairs – keep well lit and free from obstructions. Safety gates, when fitted, should be at both top and bottom.

Bathroom – keep medicine cabinets locked. Be sure that no electrical appliance can be reached by anyone in the bath.

Bedrooms – windows of children's rooms should be fitted with safety bars. Do not put portable heaters too close to furniture and curtains. Have electric blankets serviced regularly by the manufacturer.

The modern jet airliner transports passengers in numbers comparable to some ocean liners of a generation before, and at speeds then attainable only by fighter aircraft. This Boeing 747 can carry 500 passengers over a range of 8200 km (5100 miles) at a cruising speed of 980 km/hour (610 mph). It weighs 351.5 metric tons (775 000 lb) and is 70.5m (231 ft) long.

Conventional fixed-wing aircraft can fly because their wings are aerofoils – bodies specially designed to produce lift when air flows over them. When the aircraft is flying horizontally, the wings are angled slightly upwards, so that the force of the air creates an area of low pressure above them, in effect sucking the aircraft upwards; at the same time, a compensating area of high pressure is created beneath the wings, giving extra lift. When the aircraft's nose is raised, increasing the angle at which the air meets the wing, more lift is achieved. However, when the critical angle is passed, the airflow becomes turbulent, lift is lost, and the aircraft stalls.

The turbofan is the engine used to power most modern jet airliners. It is a development of the original turbojet, which works by drawing in air with a turbine-driven compressor, mixing it with burning fuel, and ejecting it at high speed. The turbofan, in addition, has a large fan with a set of blades at the front, which acts rather like a conventional propeller; it draws in extra air which bypasses the engine and is ejected along with the exhaust gases at the rear. This can drastically reduce the amount of fuel the engine has to burn, and also makes it quieter.

A food chain is a series of organisms existing in any natural community, or ecosystem, through which energy is transferred. Each organism in the series feeds on and obtains energy from the one preceding it and in turn is consumed by and provides energy for the one following it. Usually the number of links in the chain is 3 or 4 and each link is known as an energy or trophic level. All the food chains in a community make up the food web. The diagram shows part of a food cycle typical of organisms inhabiting the African savanna.

The ends of the chain are brought together by the microorganisms that feed on dead and decaying matter. These are the decomposers, or saprophytes, which break down plant and animal remains both physically and chemically. Organic and inorganic material is thus released back into the environment for recycling.

The chain begins with the producers. These are the green plants, trees, shrubs, grasses, etc., that are able, via photosynthesis, to manufacture carbohydrates using energy given out by the sun.

Glaciation

At high latitudes and high altitudes snow and ice accumulate to form glaciers. Erosion results from the movement of ice and abrasion by material embedded in the glacier. Steep sided U-shaped valleys are carved out and tributary glaciers leave hanging valleys above the main troughs. Areas of boulder clay are shifted and moulded to form groups of low, gently sloping hills known as drumlins. When ice stops moving and melts, depositional forms occur: stones and clay falling onto glaciers from valley sides are left as moraines; rivers flowing under glaciers deposit gravel and sand as eskers; and large boulders are deposited far from their origin as erratics.

U-shaped valley

Folds and faults

Mountainous areas are created by pressures in the earth's crust causing folding of the strata (layers of rock). Other variations in height of the land are caused by faulting, where the rock moves up or down in relation to the fault line.

Ice Ages

The graph shows climatic fluctuations in the Pleistocene epoch, some 10,000 to 2,000,000 years ago. We now live in one of the warm interglacial periods that alternate with cold glacial stages, the latter being named after German river valleys from which evidence for them has been gained. The map shows the maximum extent of the ice caps in the northern hemisphere during the Wurm period.

Continental drift

Continents, which are composed of rigid rock plates, glide slowly over the semi-molten mantle beneath the earth's crust. Geologists can work backwards from the present positions of the continents to suggest their positions in past geological eras.

Intense stress set up in the earth's crust by continental drift results in earthquakes as movement occurs along fault planes. The Himalaya range is thought to have been thrown up by the pressure of the Indian plate sliding beneath the Eurasian plate. Along the Pacific coast of North America two plates are sliding past each other, causing earthquakes as the stress builds up at an obstruction and is suddenly released. Seismologists can determine the location, or epicentre, of an earthquake by analyzing the shockwaves it emits, recorded at a number of seismic stations.

Volcanoes

A volcano erupts when molten rock (magma) forces its way through the earth's crust from the mantle. A characteristic volcanic mountain is formed by a cone of ash and lava thrown out from the vent. Laccoliths, dykes, and sills are formed where molten rock flows into the cracks in adjacent sedimentary rocks.

ErosionDeposition*Coastlines

Erosion by wave action causes the retreat of coastlines. Where a coast is composed of rocks of varying resistance headlands and bays will form. Wave action concentrates on the promontories, eroding the headlands into caves, sea-arches, and stacks. There is a general tendency for irregularities to be smoothed out. Material carried by the coastal currents is deposited in sheltered areas as the wave speeds decrease. Spits and lagoons are created by the movement and deposition of shingle along the coastline.

Rivers

In hilly or mountainous areas fast-moving streams and rivers carry along silt, pebbles, and even larger pieces of rock, causing erosion and the cutting of valleys. Where the slope is less steep the current slows, depositing some of the material (alluvium). The course of the river may be twisted into meanders which sometimes become cut off, forming oxbow lakes. Deltas are formed where the current is checked on meeting the sea and it flows round the resulting deposits of silt and pebbles.
